Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory's Site 300 Cleanup Document Signed

The Site-Wide Record of Decision (ROD) for environmental cleanup at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory's (LLNL) Site 300 has been signed by the U.S. Department of Energy's (DOE) National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA), U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), State of California Department of Toxic Substances Control, and the Central Valley Regional Water Quality Control Board. Site 300 is Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory's Experimental Test Facility, located in the foothills southwest of Tracy, CA.

"The Site-Wide Record of Decision identifies the final cleanup actions and cleanup standards for Site 300," said NNSA Livermore Site Office Manager Camille Yuan-Soo Hoo. "The selected remedies protect human health and the environment, comply with Federal and State requirements that are applicable to the remediation actions, are cost-effective, and utilize permanent solutions and alternative treatment technologies to the maximum extent practicable."

Significant progress has been made in the remediation of the site. Cleanup remedies have been implemented in many areas resulting in a reduction of ground water contamination, removal of contaminated soil, and elimination of risk to on-site workers in many locations.

DOE began conducting environmental restoration activities at Site 300 in 1982 to address contamination primarily resulting from past waste handling practices. The U.S. EPA placed Site 300 on the National Priorities List (Superfund) in 1990. All cleanup activities since then have been conducted under regulations administered by the U.S. EPA and the State of California. The implemented cleanup remedies will continue to operate and be monitored by the site in the future under the NNSA Long-Term Stewardship Program.

The ROD for Site 300 is available on the LLNL Environmental Community Relations website: <https://www-envirinfo.llnl.gov/>.
